

Content

Preface	11
1. Introduction	13
1.1 Issues, current state of research, and research gaps	13
1.2 Traditional handicraft, souvenirs, airport art – A short definitional excursus.....	15
1.3 Souvenir collection cultures and museums in a transdisciplinary context	18
1.4 Research theses and questions	19
1.5 Periodisation and selection of the region of study	21
2. Theoretical Principles	23
2.1 The concept of gaze and “posed” authenticities in a socioeconomic historical perspective	23
2.1.1 The tourist and traveller’s gaze	23
2.1.2 From gaze to interaction with the object – the performance turn	24
2.1.3 The tourist gaze as a view of the tourist – the mutual gaze	28
2.2 The gaze concept and the (re-)production of Herder’s thesis of “closed ethnicities” as reflected in the ethnohistorical method	30
2.3 The consumer revolution and the pre-modern consumer society as pioneers of (early) modern collecting?	32
2.4 Material culture in the context of Bourdieu’s capital theory	35
2.5 Travel keepsakes and souvenirs as a “culture-preserving” or a “culture-destroying” phenomenon? – Development-theoretical approaches	37
3. Sources and Methods	42
3.1 Some thoughts on the mixed-methods approach or the courage for method plurality	42
3.2 Selection and description of textual, material, and oral history sources – An overview.....	42
3.2.1 Textual sources	43
3.2.2 Museum collections and artefacts	48
3.2.3 A contemporary-historical perspective on the souvenir supply in the mass tourism age	51

Content

3.3	Qualitative typological content analysis, open coding, and grounded theory	52
3.4	Quantitative approaches – Statistical material and its limitations	55
3.5	The difficulty of conducting semi-structured interviews in foreign cultural areas	57
4.	The Culture of Travelling and Collecting Souvenirs in the “Long 19th Century”	59
4.1	European travel and collection activities against the background of the colonisation of Southeast Asia	59
4.2	Colonial commodity markets and international trade relations in Southeast Asia in the “long 19 th century” – A brief overview	62
4.3	Local and international actors in the late modern “(souvenir) trade sphere” in northern Southeast Asia – networkers, officials, traders, and local producers.....	66
4.3.1	Colonial collectors and actors	67
4.3.2	The role of local actors in production and trade.....	72
4.4	Trade routes and interdependencies, interregional flows of commodities and goods – A subsistence-economic orientation of handicraft production?	76
4.5	Handicraft products in the topoi of colonial collections and travelogues.....	82
4.5.1	Textile products and clothing	83
4.5.2	(Material) cultures of intoxicant and stimulant consumption.....	86
4.5.3	Jewellery production and other forms of (precious) metal processing....	91
4.5.4	Material cultures of the sacred and the ritual	94
4.6	The collection culture of the colonial age – The role of museums and exhibitions.....	96
4.6.1	The fascination for the “treasures of the East” – Southeast Asia in world fairs and colonial exhibitions.....	98
4.6.2	The South and Southeast Asian collections of the “Weltmuseum Wien” (Vienna World Museum) as sources for the colonial “traveller’s gaze” ..	103
5.	Ethnological Travel and Collection Practices as a Basis for Tourist Collections? – An Excursus in the History of Ideas	108
5.1	Travel and collection practices in the late 19 th and 20 th centuries – the transitional phase	108
5.2	The development since the end of the Second World War – From museum exhibition to guide book and travel blog	114

6. From Colonial Collecting to Modern Souvenir Trade in Southeast Asia after the Second World War – Selected Field Studies from Thailand.....	119
6.1 The decolonisation of Southeast Asia and the development of modern mass tourism – A contemporary-historical excursus	119
6.2 “Tourism Hub” Thailand – Main phases in the development of tourism from the Second World War to the present day, based on the example of hill tribe tourism in the northern region	122
6.3 Tourism and souvenir production as development factors in northern Thailand – actors and projects	127
6.4 Mass tourism and its effects on the commodification of handicraft – results of selected village studies in northern Thailand.....	137
6.4.1 From “traditional” handicraft village to souvenir producer – The villages Baan Sri Dong Yen and Baan Tong Luang.....	139
6.4.2 Souvenir production as “development (self-)help” – The villages Baan Mae Kha Phi-ang and Baan Pa Pae	149
6.5 Tourist hot spots and their influence on souvenir production using the example of the Chiang Mai Night Bazaar	159
6.5.1 On the genesis of a mass tourism hot spot – the development of the Chiang Mai Night Bazaar from the 1960s to the present day	160
6.5.2 Business structures and actors at the Night Bazaar	166
6.6 Souvenir shops and markets as a meeting zone – The mutual gaze in the field using the cities of Chiang Mai and Hua Hin as examples	173
7. Summary	189
References and Sources	198