International Center:

Seminar Room, IC 122

Martin Heintel is professor of geography at the University of Vienna with an interest in urban planning/urban studies and regional development. He served as the 2006-07 Marshall Plan Chair at the University of New Orleans, and was guest professor in various universities in Germany, Austria, Oman and Romania. He has done research in various Asian, North American, and European Countries. His main fields of interest include spatial and regional development, cross-border cooperation, regional management and third world mega-cities in South East Asia. Martin Heintel will report on the opportunities and obstacles of regional development in the EU and provide an outlook for the new Structural Funds period until 2020.
